One day, Billy was playing with Ant's prized possession, a model airplane. He was being careful, but he accidentally knocked it off the table and it broke.

Ant was furious. He yelled at Billy and told him to get out of his house. Billy was heartbroken. He didn't mean to break the airplane, and he didn't know what to do.

Billy went home and cried. He didn't understand why Ant was so mad. He thought they were best friends, and that they would always be there for each other.

The next day, Billy went back to Ant's house to apologize. He knocked on the door, but Ant didn't answer. Billy knocked again, but still no answer.

Billy was about to give up when he heard a noise coming from the backyard. He went around to the back of the house and saw Ant sitting on the swing.

Billy walked over to Ant and sat down next to him. He didn't say anything, but he put his arm around Ant's shoulder.

Ant looked up at Billy and smiled. He said, "I'm sorry, Billy. I shouldn't have yelled at you like that. I know you didn't mean to break my airplane."

Billy smiled back. He said, "I'm sorry too, Ant. I should have been more careful."

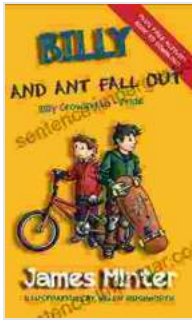

Ant and Billy hugged each other. They were friends again.

Billy and Ant learned a valuable lesson that day. They learned that even the best of friends can have disagreements. But if they are willing to forgive each other, their friendship can be stronger than ever.

Billy and Ant's friendship was put to the test, but it came out stronger than ever. They learned that forgiveness is an important part of any friendship.
