A Glimpse into the History of Running Hand

Running Hand, also known as "Xing Shu," emerged during the Eastern Han dynasty (25-220 CE) as a blend of the formal Clerical Script and the cursive Grass Script. This hybrid style combines the precision of Clerical Script with the fluidity and speed of Grass Script, resulting in a distinctive form that is both elegant and dynamic.

Running Hand gained immense popularity during the Tang dynasty (618-907 CE), where it became widely used in poetry, prose, and official documents. Renowned calligraphers such as Wang Xizhi and Yan Zhenqing left an indelible mark on the development of Running Hand, establishing standards that continue to inspire contemporary artists.

The Essence of Chinese Yun

At the heart of Chinese calligraphy lies the concept of "Yun," an elusive quality that translates to "rhythmic vitality" or "spiritual resonance." Achieving Yun requires the harmonious interplay of form, brushwork, and the artist's inner spirit.
